

Students

The attitudes, experiences, and home environments of students from PILNA 2021.

Each student has their own story and experiences in life and education. Knowing these stories helps us to understand their learning and achievement and how we can help students improve. The contextual questionnaire given to students (student contextual questionnaire) allowed the exploration of their educational experience and other factors outside school which may affect this.

Broadly, students in Papua New Guinea were asked about environmental factors, such as whether they attended early childhood education and what language they commonly used, as well as information about their parents and caregivers, including their qualifications, household wealth, and the support they gave to their children's education. They were also asked about what problems affected their well-being at school and what difficulties and issues they commonly faced. Finally, students were asked about their views on literacy, numeracy and school in general.
